THE PATHOLOGICAL PROTEIN: MAD COW, CHRONIC WASTING, AND OTHER DEADLY PRION DISEASES

Stephen C. was only 19 years old when he arrived at the PHILIP YAM in May 1995. Dementia had set in, and he had become largely unresponsive. He spent most of his days lying in bed. Stephen died shortly after he had arrived. His illness had been apparent for three years. He had been seen by a doctor, but the doctors could not diagnose. In October 1993, she went blind and slipped into a coma. In the fall of 1993, Anna P., a 30-year-old lawyer, was becoming forgetful; in March 1995, she had become so anxiety-ridden that she was terrified at the thought of going to court. She died of MAD COW, CHRONIC WASTING, was pregnant, and other diseases developed DEADLY PRION DISEASES and died later that year.
