Supreme the symbol! She doth wait, aware This too shall pass; - with calm gaze turned upon The far horizon of the last elect, Where flaming truth triumphant shall unite The paling ages of fidelity In one vast pleasure of the infinite. Above the plain she towers as the past; Before whose might the present is a babe; Nor hath the din of armies, clash of arms, Crusading legions or invading hordes, Thirst, pestilence or famine, love or hate, Avail, to swerve the prophet from the dream. Blood and oppression, peace and brotherhood Have sought the potent shadow of her arm; Within, - distracting wars of faith and doubt My rack her sore; - smiting the bold exterior Fierce storms of lashing hail and scourging wind Harass the valiant parapets in vain; While lightnings fork among the battled heights About the Publisher...
