Such speculations tend to keep the present generation in ignorance, without being at all sure of benefiting the next. The subject of education has since the year 1833 more particularly attracted public attention; and the first practical step taken on the part of the House of Commons for the promotion of it in Great Britain, was in that year, during the government of Lord Grey, when a sum of 20,000 was voted, and continued by an annual vote up to 1839. This sum, administered by the Lords of the Treasury, through the National and the British and Foreign Societies, was given in aid of private efforts, without in any way demanding a right of inspection, where assistance had been given; it was productive of much good in...
