I should, so far as I can judge. Q. Are you familiar with Mr. Coyle's handwriting A. I have seen it frequently. I was at one time connected with the same office in which he was engaged. Q. And you believe that to be his handwriting A. It has a very strong resemblance to it. I should take it to be his handwriting. Q. Did you communicate the messages of the President to Congress after Mr. Cooper was admitted as a member from Tennessee A. Generally I did. Sometimes Colonel Robert Johnson performed that duty. Q. You have charge of that branch of business in the Executive mansion, the communications of the President to Congress A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you communicate to the Senate nominations by the President of officers to be confirmed by the Senate A. I did very frequently during the 39th Congress, and during the 1st session of the 40th, and the recent executive session of the Senate. Q. Have you any knowledge of the failure to nominate any officers to the Senate who had been appointed during the recess of the Senate A. All that I know on that subject is contained in a report made to the House of Representatives, in answer to a resolution making inquiry to that effect. Q. The fact is stated in that report that nominations were not made; can you give any reason why the nominations were not made A. Towards...
